

George Holbrooke of Wickham, Hampshire

Early Life

Home and School

George Holbrooke was born on the seventh of October 1738 in Wickham, Hampshire, the only child of William Holbrooke, a naval sailing master and Mary Holbrooke. He attended the grammar school in Wickham and in 1750 he was admitted to the naval academy at Portsmouth, where he studied for three years.

Midshipman

In July 1753 George went to sea as a King's letter boy in a succession of ships-of-the-line engaged in port guardship duties.

The Books

The Colonial Post Captain

In September 1755 his father persuaded his old shipmate Edward Carlisle to take George as a master's mate into his new command Fury based at Minorca. In May 1756 Fury was with Byng's squadron at the Battle of Minorca. In June 1756 Fury captured the French frigate Vulcain and later that month Holbrooke passed his lieutenant's examination and received his commission and appointment as first lieutenant of Fury. In August 1756 Fury sailed for Portsmouth.

The Leeward Islands Squadron

In September 1756, Holbrooke followed Captain Carlisle into the new sixth-rate frigate Medina, as first lieutenant. In October Medina sailed for the Leeward Islands Squadron and in December Medina took part in the attack on Port Louis in Grenada. In February 1757 Medina captured the French frigate L'Arques.

The Jamaica Station

In April 1757, Medina sailed for Jamaica. In June 1757 Medina survived a hurricane off San Domingue and in July 1757 Medina conveyed the Governor of Florida to St. Augustine. In August 1757, when his captain was wounded in action with two Dutch pirates, George took command of Medina and captured Torenvalk, one of the pirate ships. With his captain convalescent he took command of Medina on a mission to watch the French activities at Cape François. He took part in the battle of Cape François and later drove the French frigate Outarde to her destruction on the Inagua Islands. On his return to Port Royal he was promoted to commander and given Torenvalk to command, now re-named Kestrel.

Holbrooke's Tide

In November 1757 Kestrel was sent to Portsmouth with despatches. On his arrival at the Admiralty, he was given orders to initiate a blockade of Emden in advance of Commodore Holmes' arrival. In January 1758 he survived an attempted murder. In March 1758 he negotiated the surrender of Emden before the arrival of Commodore Holmes, and later in the month captured the Dunkirk privateer Bon Chance before returning to Portsmouth for a refit.

Perilous Shore

After returning from Emden in March 1758, Holbrooke is ordered to join Commodore's Howe's Inshore Squadron of the Channel Fleet. He takes part in the raids on Saint-Malo and Cherbourg in the summer of 1758. In September he is captured at Saint-Cast as the army is being re-embarked after the second failed raid on Saint-Malo. Holbrooke is exchanged and returns to England to find that Kestrel has been given to another commander. He is ordered to the American Colonies to support the attack on Fort Niagara and sails in the packet Lord Halifax in November 1758.

Rocks And Shoals

In December 1758 Holbrooke has a lucky escape when Lord Halifax is saved from a privateer by Carlisle in Medina. Holbrooke joins Carlisle in Williamsburg for Christmas before continuing his journey to New York.
